

New bridge stops flooding, helps fish

A collaboration between Clatsop County and Columbia River Estuary Task Force has helped solve a chronic flooding problem and improved fish habitat along the John Day River.

The county Public Works

Department and CREST recently completed construction of a new bridge on John Day River Road east of Astoria. The 60-foot span replaces two culverts where water sometimes backed up during high tides and covered a section of the road, which serves nine residences and private timberland. There's also a school bus turn-around point at its end.

CREST, along with the North Coast Watershed Association, joined the project as an opportunity to enhance fish habitat in the upper reaches of the John Day River. The culverts had blocked fish passage.

The county also tapped the knowledge of residents during the project planning stages. Many were concerned not only with the flooding problem, but also potentially dangerous whirlpools that appeared near the culverts as water drained with the outgoing tides.

Funding for the project came from a variety of sources, including Oregon Watershed Enhancement Board, Bonneville Power Administration, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service, and the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration. Bergerson Construction was the general contractor.

"Thank you CREST and all the funding partners in this endeavor," said Ted Mclean, the county's Public Works director. "And a special thanks to the project managers and Bergerson Marine Construction for a job well done."
